NOTE: When measuring the following basic rules should be followed.
Disregarding these rules may lead to a badly fitting outfit.

- You must use a proper tape measure.
- Do not attempt to measure yourself, have someone do it for you.
- Do not try and read the tape measure as you are being measured.
- Stand up straight and natural. Do not slouch or tense your muscles.

Measurement Guide

Highland Traveller, Scottish Touch

Size B - Chest Size. Hold your arms out about 2 feet from your body, then place the tape measure around your body, just below your armpits. This size should be loose, now add 1.5 inches to your size, this will be your waistcoat and shirt size.

Size D - Kilt Waist. This size should be taken over your shirt. Wrap the tape around your body at the point just above your navel, pull the tape very tight then slacken it back until it feels comfortable but very firm. The larger the gent the more the tape will sink into the body, this is normal for if this size is not tight enough the Kilt will start to slip down when moving around.

Size E - Kilt Drop. At the same point as the Kilt waist (size D - just above the navel) measure down to between top of the kneecap and the mid kneecap, this size will be the length of the Kilt. It is very important that you measure straight down (as photo) and not across the body at an angle.

Size F - Shoe Size. Simply the size of shoe you require.

Size H - Your Height. This is important; it will help us to determine if your Kilt length measurement is accurate.
